IMPRISONED FOR DEBT.

William Lotta's Body Held for a Debt of $5.25.

William Lotta, of 129 Seventh street, enjoys the unique, if not pleasant experience of being the first person sent to the Lackawanna county jail by an alderman under the old debtor's act.

Lotta was sued for trespass by a neighbor on June 21. Judgment of $5.25 was given against the defendant by Alderman John P. Kelly, of the Eighteenth ward. Constable James W. Clark went to sell Lotta's personal effects but the goods and chatties he found on the premises would not commensurate to satisfy the judgment so, in accordance with the old statute, under which the action was prosecuted, Lotta's body was seized and Saturday evening last was delivered at the county jail to be detained in the "debtor's cell" until such time as the debt and costs were satisfied.

The debtor's cell is a separate and distinct department in the upper part of the jail. Under the law a debtor is not to be placed in the ordinary jail cell. It is a distinction without a difference in these days, but under the common law it obtained a significance. Lotta, of course, will get out when the insolvency laws, a check which the state puts on the workings of the common law.
